TIME TO GET OUT!

Writing is on the wall after Danes say No to Maastricht

THE 'NO' VOTE against the Maastricht Treaty delivered by the people of Denmark in their referendum on June 3rd has sent shock waves throughout Europe, and has caused alarm and dismay to the Euro-fanatics bent on conning the European nations into their planned mega-state.

And here in Britain a number of opinion polls conducted shortly after the Danish referendum result indicate that the British people, if they were allowed their own referendum, would vote against Maastricht by an even bigger margin than the Danes did.

DENMARK REJECTS TREATY

For years, our paper and the British National Party, which it supports, have been trying to warn the people of this country against the designs of those who have been trying to push us deeper and deeper into Europe.

Not only have we opposed European political union, which the Maastricht Treaty was intended to bring closer, we have opposed British involvement in the European Community in any shape or form. Membership has brought no benefit to Britain: it has all but destroyed our industry; it accounts for at least a million of our unemployed; it has raised food prices by about £15 per family — and this is apart from the loss of our national sovereignty which being part of the EC has entailed.

All along the line we have said that Britain should not have gone into Europe, and that she should withdraw at the earliest opportunity. And all along the line events have proved us right!

EUROPE IN CHAOS
This is how the EC was seen by the Daily Mail cartoonist after Denmark's No vote

Although the Irish voters, tempted by big bribes, later voted for the Maastricht Treaty, some of our Government ministers are now admitting privately that the Danish verdict has killed the Treaty stone-dead, and a few are acknowledging that the EC may indeed be killed with it. Whether this is true or not, one thing is for sure: Britain should quit the Community without further ado!

Tide turning against European union

Not only in Britain but throughout much of the rest of Europe, the EC is becoming less and less popular as people in the member states wake up to the fact that their nationhood is gradually being taken away from them, for example:-

FRANCE

According to the latest reports, President Mitterand could be heading for a humiliation in the referendum on the Maastricht Treaty scheduled for September. In a recent survey it was found that support for the Treaty is falling by 5 per-cent a month. According to the Daily Mail, there are "deep fears in France over loss of sovereignty..."

GERMANY

Following the recent Danish referendum, a phone poll run by a TV station attracted 70,000 callers, with four out of five voting against Maastricht.

HOLLAND

Polls now show that 55 per-cent of the people want a referendum on the Maastricht Treaty. 60 per-cent still support the Treaty but that figure has been rapidly falling since the Danish No vote.

LUXEMBOURG

The Government, which wrote the basic draft of the Maastricht Treaty, is now facing a massive revolt from its people, with polls indicating a majority against the Treaty.

DENMARK

Opinion polls show that in the days after the No vote against Maastricht hardly anyone had been persuaded to change their mind as a result of the huge impact the vote had on the rest of Europe.

THE POLITICIANS LOSE TOUCH

IF there's one thing that's becoming glaringly obvious in all white countries today, it must be that the politicians no longer remotely speak for the people.

The vote against the EC's Maastricht Treaty by the Danes was just one small symptom of the ongoing disaffection of ordinary folk from the phony 'liberal' ideals and internationalist schemes of their rulers.

Of course, there's nothing new about the true gut convictions of the people being 'out of sync' with the aims of the political class that claims to speak and act in their name. This has been so for a long time. What is to some extent new is the way the politicians can no longer just lead the people by the nose.

Up until now, the politicos, who naturally despise those they trick into voting for them at election time, have been able to rely on their own and the media's lying propaganda to keep the masses browbeaten, tongue-tied and befuddled.

They could at least continue to do this whilst there was enough brass around the place to bribe the populace into accepting their muck.

As far as Britain is concerned, Mrs. Thatcher pushed that trick as far as it could go during the fat and stupid 1980s over which she presided. The British were undermined by easy living into a state of lazy, selfish and mindless apathy with a short-lived flow of 'fast bucks'. But this has now dried up for good.

Britain today, partly because of the Thatcherite mismanagement of its economy as a system of mass bribery designed for short-term Tory electoral gain, is locked into recession like no other advanced country. Even Messrs. Major and Lamont are being forced to admit it.

Now the British people are coming out of their Thatcher-induced stupor. They are starting to see what happened to their country while they slept, and what is still happening.

But the politicians no longer have the goodies to keep the children quiet, and the children are growing restive, not to say angry. Their mood towards the politicians is in fact turning ugly — and not before time — as it comes home to them what has been done to their once clean, proud and decent nation.

But this isn't stopping the politicians continuing along their well-worn rut. They seem as determined as ever to keep flooding Britain with all the waifs and strays of Afro-Asia. They have no formula for putting down the crime and terrorism that are turning life in Britain into a nightmare. They still have ears for nobody but the pushy anti-British minorities that they have allowed to infest the country.

It may be that our politicians think that this country's 'closed shop' electoral system will keep popular anger at bay for ever by denying it proper representation in parliament and elsewhere. However, now that the British people are directly suffering the evil effects of their policies as never before, such anger is not about to subside. If it is denied one form of expression, it may find others even less to the politicians' liking. The latter are now thoroughly out of touch with the British people, who have had enough of being made the guinea pigs of their bizarre multi-racialist and internationalist experiments and who want none of their 'brave new world'.

If they carry on as they are, Britain's political classes may yet live to regret it.

RACE-MIXERS PLOT NEW CLASSROOM BRAINWASHING OFFENSIVE

THE COALITION of aliens and white degenerates, perverts and traitors who have been given charge of the education of our children have just launched a new scheme to dirty British youngsters' minds in the schoolroom. The lunatic left-controlled National Union of Teachers has issued so-called 'guidelines' on how to conduct 'anti-racist' and 'multi-cultural' teaching.

Their professed aim is to stop education in Britain being, as they spell out, 'nationalistic' and 'Eurocentric'. In other words, British youngsters are to be taught not to have any pride in themselves or their culture. Under the 'guidelines' cooked up by an NUT (in this case highly appropriate initials) advisory committee on 'equality' under the chairmanship of Asian immigrant Elam Singam, and enthusiastically approved by Union General Secretary Doug McEvoy, British children are, for example, to be taught Rastafarian poetry and given the idea that it is equal to the works of Shakespeare. Then again, Mozart, Beethoven and Wagner are liable to be downgraded, in the trendy lingo of the 'anti-racists', to the status of ''dead white males'' whose works were in no way superior to the jungle rhythms of reggae and rap.

De misery o' de Englishman

AS GOOD AS SHAKESPEARE
This doggerel is a part of 'A song for England' by West Indian writer Andrew Salkey. According to a report in the* Daily Express, *it could well become part of the English Lit curriculum in our schools.

Western art, for example Michelangelo, Rembrandt and Turner, is to be presented as absolutely on a par with, if not inferior to, the cave daubs of African bushmen and Australian aborigines; in the name of 'equality', instead of being introduced to the glories of European art, British kids, to the extent they're taught anything at all on the subject, will spend more and more of their time in class having the supposed merits — real or imaginary — of all sorts of alien cultural traditions rammed down their throats.

DOWN WITH WHITE SCIENCE

In science and maths too, the youngsters are to be taught that, in spite of all evidence to the contrary, it is not white scientists and mathematicians who have made the modern world, but ''scientists from the Indian sub-continent'' (whoever these may be) and Islamic mathematicians of yesteryear on whom future emphasis is to be put.

In PE the 'anti-racists' say that the old presumption that Afro-Caribbeans only excel in sport must be replaced by a new one, which is that they're just as good at intellectual activities — indeed every bit as good as ourselves!

Geography and history, meanwhile, are to be turned into vehicles for brainwashing white youngsters with feelings of guilt about 'colonialism', slavery and 'racism'. The former is to stop focusing on Britain and Europe, and instead talk about such things as the migration patterns of ethnic minorities. The latter is to portray the imperial expansion of Britain and other European powers as one long story of 'oppression' and 'exploitation'.

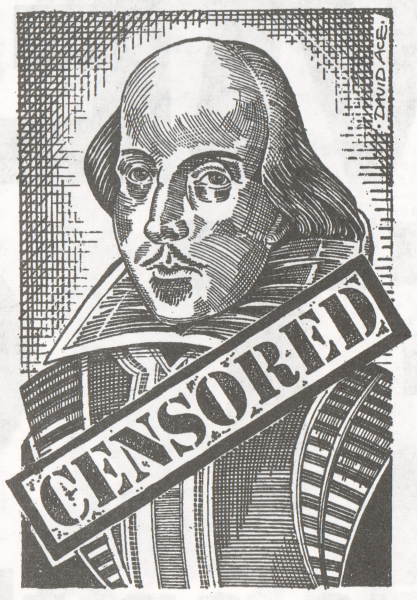
MEALY-MOUTHED TORY REACTION

A certain amount of mealy-mouthed criticism of this insane nonsense has come from Tory spokesmen. But little of it has been concerned with any damage that might be inflicted on our own children as a result of it. Instead, it has concentrated on the supposedly adverse effects on immigrant pupils. For example, Mr. Donald Naismith, Education Director of the Tory-controlled London Borough of Wandsworth, is worried only that the NUT's 'anti-racist' guidelines will lead to 'ethnic minority' children not being given the western values which provide the framework of our society so as to enable them to ''take their place,'' as he puts it, within that society.

Tory Schools minister Eric Forth is as anxious to crush 'racism' among white children as are the lunatic leftists of the NUT. But he maintains that the national curriculum recently introduced by the Government already has the teeth to do the job, providing the scope, as he puts it, to ''counter racism.''

In fact, quite a number of Tory local authorities, some of them in overwhelmingly white areas, have been introducing provisions to enforce multi-racialism on British kids. Hampshire, for example, is in the process of force-feeding children with race-mixing ideas in class. Hertfordshire awhile back came up with a vicious scheme for police-style monitoring of youngsters from kindergarten upwards for any so-called 'racist attitudes' they might be harbouring.

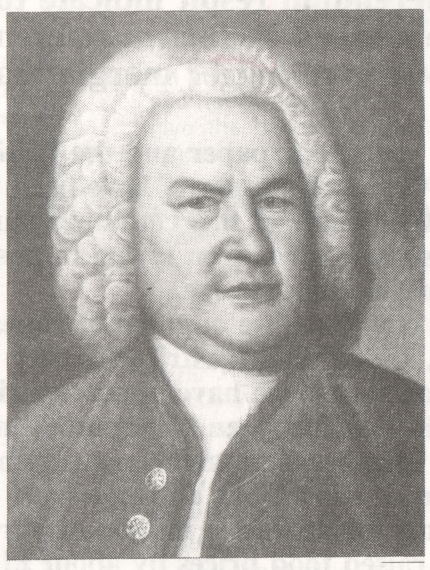
The only concern of a number of other Conservative spokesmen is that a development of the school curriculum in the direction the NUT wants may back-handedly stir up racial feelings and awareness among young Whites, rather then kill such feelings.



JUST A 'DEAD WHITE MALE'
Shakespeare in the schools as planned by the NUT, seen in this sketch by the* Daily Mail artist. In future, Hamlet and The Merchant of Venice *are to be given no higher rating than Rasta 'poetry'.

ONLY MINOR DISAGREEMENT

In short, the Tory critics of the NUT proposals don't really disagree with the aims underlying them, only with the proposed methods, which they see as too blatant. Certainly it is a fact that in 13 years of Conservative rule nothing has been done to slow down the multi-racialist juggernaut that is crushing the British people, whether among our kids in the schools or in any other area of the nation's life. Indeed, it could be said that much of what is now being put forward by the NUT for brainwashing in the classroom is almost superfluous in as much as just such lying propaganda techniques are already in use, and indeed have been in use for some time. What the NUT proposals seem to do is merely formalise an educational procedure long in operation and, where thought necessary, extend it just that bit further.



BACH
If the NUT has its way, his* St. Matthew Passion *will be no more than on a par with the songs of Madonna.

As an example of the subversion of the classroom some time before the latest NUT proposals were made known last month, a report in the Sunday Telegraph early in 1991 said that:-

> ''Classical music is in danger of disappearing from school timetables, with pupils learning instead about the greatest hits from the world of rock, rap and reggae. Government-appointed education experts have turned their backs on tradition and excluded the names of Beethoven, Bach and other great composers from the national curriculum.
> ''Teachers will be free to choose Madonna and M.C. Hammer over Mahler and Haydn, in spite of government promises that new guidelines on what should be taught would strengthen the already perilous position of the classics.''

These developments, it will be noted, cannot be blamed on the left-dominated NUT but are the work of a body that is acknowledged in the report as 'government-appointed'. It would therefore seem that Tory criticisms of the latest NUT educational manifesto amount very largely to the pot calling the kettle black — or, as some would say, they're all in it together!

THE REAL ISSUE VERY SIMPLE

The issue is really a very simple one. The reason why we should oppose any and every form of multi-racialist brainwashing in the classroom is that the whole multi-racialist, 'multi-cultural' idea is a lie. It is not true that non-European art and music are the equal of our own. Even where such things may have some sort of merit when judged in their own terms, they can mostly mean nothing whatever to white youngsters, whose valuable time and energy should not be used up in learning about them.

In maths, science and technology it is a fact that whatever contributions may have come from outside in times past — such as algebra from the ancient Arabs — the modern world, in the whole of its material aspect, has been built by the white genius almost alone.

As for the white empires which our ancestors suffered, fought and died to build, these were a grand force for civilisation. It may be that native peoples in colonised territories were incidentally 'exploited' (whatever that term means exactly). But who did they think we were? Father Christmas? If it's any consolation, the 'exploitation' they got from us was more often than not a good bit less nasty than what they had had from their own kind before we showed up and what they have had from their own kind since we gave them their 'freedom'.

Whether the lies of the race-mixers are fed to our children in concentrated doses by the NUT or in drips and drabs by the Department of Education and the local authorities, they must be fought tooth and nail by every right-thinking British person. For they have been deliberately contrived to demoralise our youngsters into giving in without a struggle to the 'New World Order', in which there is to be no place for the British or any other white peoples as distinct entities. If we want a future for our young, the time for resistance is now!

Political correctness at our Universities

THE PROCESS described in the main article on this page has already started to take effect at some universities in Britain. At Middlesex, staff have outlawed certain 'politically incorrect' terms like 'ethnic minority' and substituted 'culturally different'. In a recent 'Segregation Day' at University College, Cardiff, designed to highlight the effects of 'racism', fair-haired people were refused access to the Student Union building except through certain doors and only allowed to use certain bars. No, we have not invented this — it actually has happened! (See Sunday Telegraph, 28.6.92)

The BNP and Europe

JOHN TYNDALL ANSWERS SOME TOPICAL QUESTIONS

The rejection by the Danes of the Maastricht Treaty has set off a massive tide of opposition to further surrenders of power to the European central bureaucracy, and many people in Britain are demanding that this country be given a referendum on Maastricht just as Denmark has been. More and more British people are beginning to question the whole value of Britain's European commitment. At this juncture it is opportune to remind readers that British Nationalist and the British National Party have been against Britain's membership of the European Community from the very beginning of the party's formation in 1982 and the launching of this paper a few month's later. Repeatedly over the years, we have warned readers where the road to Europe is leading. Now we find our predictions being more than amply vindicated by events. In this special feature, BNP leader John Tyndall deals with a number of the questions and arguments with which the party is frequently confronted on the European issue, and clarifies BNP policies on matters relating to Europe.

Q. Many people are saying that the 'No' vote in Denmark against the Maastricht Treaty has killed the Treaty stone-dead. Is that your view?

J.T. It certainly should have done. It was written into the Treaty from the beginning that for it to take effect it must be ratified by all the 12 member-states of the EC. As the Government of Denmark has made it clear that it will not ratify it in defiance of the country's voters, the Treaty should rightly become null and void. However, as we should know from long experience, when the Euro-fanatics find that the game is not going their way they are in the habit of moving the goalposts. Most certainly, they are not going to accept the verdict of the Danes and will be looking for a way of keeping the Treaty alive and pushing it through regardless of that verdict. We must always remember that to our overlords 'democracy' is an institution to be praised and honoured just as long as its verdicts go the way they want; as soon as things turn out otherwise, they find excuses to ditch it.

Q. There will be many in this country who will agree with the BNP's opposition to Maastricht, with its provisions for further centralising power in Europe, but will maintain that the European Community is a perfectly satisfactory organisation for Britain to remain a member of as long as it remains just an economic free trade area and does not go any further towards political union. What is your view about this?

J.T. Firstly, there can no no question whatever of restricting the EC to a mere 'economic area'; the architects of the Rome Treaty by which the Community was first set up always intended it from the beginning to develop into a political union, and that has indeed always been its raison d'etre. Those who constitute the driving power over the EC today will never be content with restricting the Community to economic arrangements only; they will persist in their determination to pursue the formation of a political super-state. Any delay or modification to which they consent in that regard will merely be a tactical response to those who protest that the process is going ahead too fast. These people will never be persuaded to give up the dream of a single Europen mega-state. Therefore to talk about restricting the Community to an economic association is to chase phantoms; it will not be permitted except within the limited context of altering the timetable in the drive to political union.

The second point is that, even were it possible to restrict the Community to a trading area, the plain fact is that this trading area has never been of any benefit to Britain. Since our entry into the EC in 1973, we have constantly suffered a huge trading deficit with Europe, this coming to a total of £56 billion between that year and 1990. Our manufacturing base, the foundation of Britain's former prosperity, has been appallingly eroded — partly through imports from outside Europe but very largely through imports from within the Community.

This is why our party has always maintained that Britain should not only reject the present moves towards political union in Europe but should withdraw from the EC altogether. This remains BNP policy.

Q. What would be your alternative to membership of the EC?

J.T. The very phrasing of that question reveals a sample of the mind-processing that Euro-propaganda has created in this country. The first and simplest answer is that the alternative to belonging to the EC is not belonging to it. For many centuries before joining the EC in 1973 we managed to exist without it, and we can assuredly do so again! We can simply revert to being an independent nation trading with whoever will trade with us. In this regard we would place ourselves in a category similar to that of Japan, which like Britain is a densely populated group of islands requiring to import most of its minerals and some of its food. We are in fact better placed than Japan because we are rich in energy products, such as coal and oil, and have more habitable and fertile land per thousand of the population. If she can survive and prosper without being part of any formal trading bloc, then so can we.

I can, however, go much further — should this not be enough — in proposing an alternative to British membership of Europe. It is that we seek to renegotiate favourable trading arrangements with our Old Commonwealth partners, Canada, Australia and New Zealand. Such trading arrangements have a much more natural basis than any with Europe because these countries' economies are mostly complementary to ours, whereas those of the EC countries are competitive to ours. Canada, Australia and New Zealand are large-scale exporters of food, while the first two are also large-scale exporters of minerals; we must, as stated before, import most of our minerals and at least some of our food. By giving preference to their food and minerals over other imports, we ought to be able to place ourselves in a good position to negotiate favourable terms of entry to their markets for our exports of manufactured goods. There there exists an ideal basis for trade — with the big difference that it is not a trade which needs harm the basic economic structure of the United Kingdom. If our old Commonwealth partners so consented, we could with them in fact form a trading area that would be self-sufficient in almost every economic need but whose members at the same time would not need to be locked in the kind of interminable trading quarrels we have had with EC countries because with them the trade of one cannot prosper except at the expense of the trade of another.

Q. There will be those who will claim that by advocating this policy you are living in an imperial past that cannot be recalled. For some decades the Old Commonwealth countries have been moving away from us and making their own trading arrangements with the outside world. Besides this, new patterns of immigration affecting all of those countries mean that their populations are less 'British' than in the past. What is your answer to this?

J.T. First, it is important not to confuse cause with effect. It is perfectly true that the countries of which we are speaking have been moving further away from Britain in recent times, but a major reason for this has been our own policy of deserting them in favour of closer ties with Europe. If the ties with Europe were undone, we could take the first steps towards a renewal of our trading partnership with the Old Commonwealth. No-one, surely, would presume that the latter task would be simple and easy — a mere resumption of where we left off. We would have to start from scratch in what would be a slow and difficult process, but I submit that this process would be much less difficult than has been the process of trying to reconcile our trading interests with the countries of Europe — trading interests which, in the last analysis, simply cannot be reconciled because of the mutually competitive nature of the trading relationships we have with our European neighbours. Leaving aside such matters as tradition and sentiment, the fact is that we can offer Canada, Australia and New Zealand something that they want: a large and assured market for their exports of food and minerals. That is something which their leaders, whatever their political orientation, would be insane to turn down. Right away, even without reciprocal favours in the way of their buying our exports of finished goods, our switch of food purchases to them from Europe would result in a saving of some £15 a week for every family in the United Kingdom.

To state these things is, I can assure you, not "living in an imperial past." It is addressing ourselves very much to the realities of the present.

With regard to the claim that the countries of the Old Commonwealth are now, through new patterns of immigration, less 'British' than previously, that cannot be denied. But it still remains a fact that our ties of racial kinship with them are vastly greater than those existing with Europe. Of Australia's 17 millions, still some three quarters are of British extraction. Of New Zealand's 3½ millions, the portion is even greater. In Canada, those of British stock are still by a long way the largest single ethnic group. In these countries combined, there are probably at least 25 million people whose origins lie in the British Isles, mostly in England, Wales, Scotland and Ulster. How many ethnic British are there in continental Europe?

The old British Empire contained a vast and complicated patchwork of races and nationalities, the larger part of them sharing little in common with ourselves. Most of them had to be held down by armed force. The policy of the Empire was, to all intents and purposes, decided by the United Kingdom, with the others — even the Dominions — expected to fall in behind. There is little comparison between that arrangement and the kind of partnership we are advocating, which is between kindred peoples collaborating on a basis of complete equality and each one sovereign and free to contract out of any arrangement not to its advantage. The partnership would be held together, not by force, but by common consent — although there would be much to be said for a system of mutual defence arrangements between its members. To equate this with old imperial system is bending the truth completely. Our present policy is designed, not to resurrect the 19th century, but to meet the requirements of the 21st century.

Q. Mrs. Thatcher and former Cabinet colleagues like Norman Tebbit and Nicholas Ridley have warned us about the growing power and ambition of Germany and said that present centralising trends in the EC are likely to lead increasingly to domination by Germany. Do you share this view?

J.T. Unlike Mrs. Thatcher and her friends, I do not see Germany as some big, bad bogy which we must always regard as having hostile designs against us. As for resenting Germany simply because she has emerged as the largest and strongest European power, with therefore greater weight in the Community than any other, this is just plain silly.

The present crushing inferiority on the part of Britain viz-a-viz Germany is not Germany's fault but entirely our own. It is the direct result of Britain trying to be a European power, in which field she cannot possibly compete with Germany — instead of an oceanic world power, in which field she need be in no way inferior to Germany nor ever feel under threat from Germany. For us, the proper counterweight to German power and preponderance in Europe has always been, and still is today, a close partnership between Britain and the countries of the Old Commonwealth along the lines that I have stated when dealing with the previous question. As things are at present, we have spent the past three decades undoing that partnership in order to be part of Europe. Now, as a result of this Euro-oriented policy, we are the inferior partners of the Germans in Europe rather than the senior partner in a British Commonwealth which, when all its resources of population and natural wealth are considered together, could enable us to be a power every bit as great as Germany. For this position we have to thank those who have played the lead in the drive to Europe and away from the Old Commonwealth — and these, let it not be forgotten, include Mrs. Thatcher and those others who now tremble and whine when confronted with German strength. It can surely be appreciated why we have no sympathy with these people, who are merely showing discomfort at the fruits of the very policies they, as much as any others, have pursued over the years.

Our policy has always been simple and clear-cut. Let Britain disengage from Europe and pursue an oceanic destiny. This can not only make us as strong as any nation in Europe, including Germany, but it can remove the sources of rivalry and conflict between Britain and the major powers of Europe, most of all Germany.

SOUTH AFRICA

Red gangster reverts to type

EVER SINCE his release from prison a couple of years ago, where he had quite justly been held since 1963 for his confessed role in a plot to bring bloody communist revolution to South Africa, Nelson Mandela has been put under the glare of international media coverage and feted by one and all as some sort of great 'world statesman'.

But now, as South Africa slides into the mayhem not too far removed from what he and his red-controlled ANC were conspiring to bring about some 30 years ago, Mandela's mask is slipping. Once more, the arrogant face of the vicious red terrorist is starting to show.

Last month, Mandela, an individual of meagre personal intelligence whose strings are in reality pulled from behind the scenes by his puppet-master, veteran Jewish South African Communist Party leader Joe Slovo, started anew to threaten the country's Whites. In an outburst of blustering he proclaimed that white people would become targets for violent Blacks if they didn't surrender their country fast enough to ANC control. Blacks, he said, were growing "frustrated."

He didn't explain why such Blacks, who didn't build South Africa and its developed infrastructure of civilisation in the first place, and could not maintain it once white rule had collapsed, had any right to feel this way. Still less did he give any justification for acts of violence against the white people upon whom the existence of the country depends.

Despite Mandela's vicious ranting, the ANC on its own hasn't anything like the strength to pull down the South African state. This may be why since June's tribal violence he has been whining for the United Nations to get stuck into South Africa and do his dirty work for him.

WHY WE SHOULD NOT KNOCK THE MONARCHY

This historic British institution is more important than the behaviour of individuals

CHARLES AND DIANA
Both they and their marriage may be less than perfect, but we should beware of the motives of those journalists who specialise in royal muck-raking

BRITISH NATIONALIST has never been numbered among those tabloids that slobber, starstruck, over the Royal Family. We have been only too ready to criticise the Royals when their actions merit criticism — as when we have condemned Prince Charles, for instance, for his public postures in support of multi-racialism.

And this is not all. We believe, like many people, that the Royal Family costs the nation an excessive amount of money and that it ought, like millions of other families in Britain's present recession, to be called upon to make economies. For a start, it could do what the rest of us have to do: pay taxes.

We do not expect the Royals to live in council houses. The institution of Royalty, if it is to be true to the traditions of which it is part, needs to be surrounded with an atmosphere of some grandeur and pomp. Nevertheless, in view of the vast wealth of The Queen it would not be unreasonable to ask Her Majesty to transfer some of her assets to the nation for productive national use, as well as contribute her and her family's just share to the Inland Revenue.

STINK

All this having been said, we detect an unwholesome stink in the present media treatment of the Royals, in particular their obsessive Peeping-Tom approach to the marital troubles of the Prince and Princess of Wales.

Certain journalists, when challenged over this, are in the habit of draping themselves in the finery of 'civic responsibility', protesting piously about the public's 'right to know'. We would respect such protestations a little more were the writers and reporters in question ready to display the same spirit of 'openness' in their coverage of other matters of public concern which these days are made subject to cover-up by hidden forces of censorship.

But this is not the case. These bloodhounds of 'investigative journalism', so zealous in digging up and publicising Royal Family tittle-tattle, are perfectly willing to keep mum when it comes to scandals of all kinds which the 'Big Brother' of media control deems it proper to protect from public exposure — such as the race riots that are breaking out in towns and cities all over this country, or some of the vilest of crimes that involve culprits belonging to the ethnic minorities.

It all boils down to this. Royal gossip and scandal are good for business — they make money for writers, editors and newspaper-owners. That is why there is so much of them!

But that is not all. There are some folk in the media who are trying to undermine the Royals because they have political axes to grind. This is where we need to affirm the basis of this paper's support for Royalty.

No-one should ever underestimate the importance of tradition and symbolism in the maintenance of nationhood. Take these things away and the fabric of nationhood becomes that much weaker.

The institution of Monarchy is especially important as a symbol of British nationhood. If that symbol is removed, it will make it just that bit easier for those dedicated to the destruction of our nation to succeed in their objective.

MONARCHY INCONVENIENT IN DRIVE TO EUROPE

One reason why many are apprehensive about Britain getting more deeply immersed in Europe is because they believe that our Monarchy might be jeopardised. Remove the Monarchy as a part of national symbolism and tradition and the job of making us a province of a European mega-state will be a few milestones nearer to achievement.

Also, we must not forget that the Monarchy is one of the few remaining institutions symbolising the British connection in the countries of the Old Commonwealth — the White Commonwealth. Take it away and that connection will be gravely weakened, possibly beyond repair. In an interview on page 3 of this issue BNP leader John Tyndall makes it clear why it is so important that the British connection in these countries should be strengthened rather than weakened. That strengthening is in fact vital to Britain's resurgence as a great nation.

For these reasons, those who fall into the trap of agitating for getting rid of the Monarchy, just because they are unhappy about the conduct of some royal individual or another, should think again.

In the long history of this country monarchs have come and monarchs have gone. Royal dynasties have come and royal dynasties have gone. Probably no particular dynasty can ever be regarded as permanent, and most certainly no monarch ever is.

But there is a permanency in the institution itself which Britain would neglect to protect at her peril.

Think about it the next time you curse the Royals for doing this or that!

THE TABLOIDS
Royal Family tittle-tattle is good for their profits

FOOTBALL COMMENTARY

England: a rabble on the field and off it

GRAHAM TAYLOR's multi-racial medley described by journalists as an 'England' football team returned from Sweden last month after an on-the-field display in the European Championship that was worse than dismal. For this it would be wrong to blame the several black players any more than the white ones — all shared in the debacle. However, the almost total lack of team spirit and pride shown by the players — all of whom are capable of performing much better than they did in this tournament — is in our opinion not unrelated to the fact that such a 'United Nations' hotch-potch of players could hardly be expectd to feel any sense of national identity. If if they had won, could they — or we — have regarded it as an 'English' victory?

The performance of many of the 'fans', if such they can be called, was even worse. Once again the name of Britain was disgraced by the rampaging of hordes of morons through a foreign city, sustaining continentals' image of us as the yobbos of Europe.

Sociologists have been wringing their hands over football hooliganism from the first moment that it manifested itself several years ago. As far as we are concerned, the problem is far more simple than the sociologists make out. British youth today is given no understanding of the meaning of the word 'discipline'. British youth — and particularly English youth — is discouraged by both school and media from feeling anything in the way of national pride. Not least, in the organisation of youth today (or rather the lack of it) no useful or constructive channels are provided for young men's natural aggression. Our educationalists try to bring up our young men to be wimps — and the result is that a good many of them react by being oafs.

Something is very sick in the state of Britain, and our old-gang rulers clearly have no remedy for it.

We can be thankful that the Scots, by enterprising football and good crowd behaviour, salvaged a little of British pride in Sweden.

WHY NOT MIND BRITAIN'S BUSINESS, MR. MAJOR?

PRIME MINISTER Major, like all good 'liberals', is constantly looking for world 'issues' to busy himself over — rather than concentrate his attention of the problems of his own country.

The latest issue in which Premier John would like to have a finger in the pie is the internal crisis in South Africa, where one black faction is fighting a murderous war against another black faction.

According to a report in the Daily Mail (25th June), Mr. Major "is ready to take a leading role in the South African crisis by calling for EC teams to watch over troubled townships."

It is news to us that South Africa is in the EC. However, such trifles would not bother either Mr. Major or other EC leaders. As with Yugoslavia, they are possessed by an itch to interfere anywhere and everywhere where they feel they may have a 'role'. One of the important aims in the European Community is to find its functionaries things to do to justify their existence. If there is not enough to do in the EC, they must simply look further afield!

Our own view is that what happens in South Africa is the business of the South Africans. They are the people on the spot and best able to cope with their own problems. You may like or dislike the South African system, depending on your point of view. But let us all settle for one thing on which we ought to be able to agree: let our politicians mind Britain's business and let other countries mind theirs!

Government ministers admit it: no recovery for three years

IN the run-up to April's general election Government spokesmen were telling us every week that economic recovery was 'just around the corner'. In fact this promise had been repeated without pause for at least the previous three years but, as we know, the recovery never came. Never mind — the promise served its purpose: it kept the hopes of the voters alive until the election had come and gone!

Now that there is not another election likely until nearly five years' time, the Government can afford to be a little more honest. Some ministers are now admitting that there will be no end to the recession for another three years!

In a report in the Sunday Times on June 21st it was stated that Treasury officials fear that, with unemployment continuing to rise as it is doing, consumer spending will be yet further depressed. They are also worried that "the level of government borrowing will be worsened by low tax receipts and larger-than-expected payouts of unemployment benefit."

The Treasury, the report continued, "confirmed last week that its 1 per-cent growth forecast for this year, made by Lamont in his pre-election budget three months ago, was now unattainable." And it went on: "Officials told City economists that the economy's poor performance earlier this year meant that a downgrading of the Government's forecast to zero growth or below was inevitable."

On the housing front the outlook is equally gloomy. Treasury officials now accept, said the report, that the Chancellor's rescue package for the housing market, including an eight-month suspension of stamp duty, has failed to revive demand. Housing experts now say that the market shows no signs of a decisive recovery.

But despite the gloomy prospects for recovery, the report continued, the Treasury is ruling out a cut in base rates until the pound, which remains one of the weakest currencies in the exchange-rate mechanism (ERM) becomes stronger.

"This attitude," said the Sunday Times, "is alarming Tory MPs, who now believe the post-election pick-up in the economy was a false dawn and that the climb out of recession will be slow and painful. It has triggered fresh concern among some backbenchers about Britain's membership of the ERM."

Old gang incapable

None of this news causes us the slightest surprise. We have known all along that there was not the slightest chance of any economic recovery this year, next year, sometime or ever — as long as present policies continue. Tory Governments since 1979 have shown with abundant clarity that they have not the slightest idea how to run a national economy and that everything on the economic front has got completely out of control. Labour of course did not do any better in the years when they were in office. Old-gang economics, like old-gang politics, simply are not up to the job of finding the policies necessary to make Britain a successful modern industrial nation. And even if they did know what had to be done we can be sure that they would not have the will to do it!

What is first needed is a government that takes proper command of economic forces in this country and makes them work for the nation — not for the City, not for International Finance, not for the multinational companies, not for the Europeans, not for the Japanese,

THE EARTH SUMMIT

Third World on the scrounge again!

THE much heralded 'Earth Summit' in Rio de Janeiro last month might, in other circumstances, have provided a useful forum for the discussion of international environmental problems. As it was, the meeting served little more purpose than to give a platform for upstart Third World states to attack the developed nations, blame them for most of their (the Third World states') troubles and make rasping demands for them to give the Third World more money.

Needless to say, the mass media reverently reported all the Third World's complaints and in most cases treated them with sympathy. The general tenor of media reporting of the conference was that it was all very well for the advanced nations to tell the assembled delegates that the world should do this and the world should do that but when it came to getting the co-operation of the underdeveloped nations for such schemes it would be necessary to give them much more aid.

Another demand of the conference, once again slanted towards the Third World point of view, was that the advanced nations should open their borders much more than in the past to Third World nations' exports so as to boost the latter's trade – and thus their economic development.

We heard of nobody asking the obvious question: why the hell should the advanced nations jeopardise their own domestic industries just to do the backward nations favours?

Also not heard was the suggestion that the Third World's seemingly everlasting economic backwardness might be due to its own incompetence and that therefore there was no good reason whatever why the advanced nations should eternally be subsidising it.

PLAYING SANTA CLAUS

In one report our own Prime Minister John Major was described as visiting the shanty towns of Rio de Janeiro and being visibly touched by the plight of the poor children there. Mr. Major, the report went on, is now going to take personal initiative to raise a fund at home to help these children.

We would suggest that if our Premier wants to take time off from his prime ministerial duties to raise funds he would be better occupied doing so on behalf of children in Britain. In this country many amenities needed for young people, such as schools, technical colleges and facilities for physical recreation, are appallingly underfunded. Any national leader with the correct sense of priorities would be concerning himself about raising more money for these rather than for causes thousands of miles from home.

We take no pleasure in the poverty of children in Brazil or any other backward country. But if anything is to be done about it the responsibility lies with their own peoples and their own governments.

MAJOR
Seen here with Rio children, he plans to play Santa Claus with them while our own youngsters go short of many basic essentials, particularly in school and physical recreation facilities.

Maxwell sons lived in luxury and planned to build new business empire while 32,000 employees stood to lose most of their pensions

EVERY MORNING Ivy Needham sits in her council house in Leeds writing letters pleading for help.

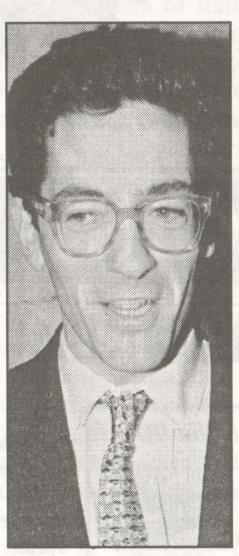
Mrs. Needham (66) is a widow and half-blind. In May she was told that her £60-a-month pension from Maxwell Communication Corporation was being cut to £18 and may even have to be stopped.

She is one of the 32,000 employees and ex-employees of Robert Maxwell whose pensions are under threat following Maxwell's theft of £450 million from their pension fund before his mysterious death earlier this year.

Yet despite this, Maxwell's two sons, Ian and Kevin, were planning to start their own business empire before their recent arrest on suspected fraud.

Kevin Maxwell (33) was at the time still living in his luxury house in Chelsea, currently valued at £1.65 million. The two younger Maxwells were negotiating a loan of £6 million to start their new venture and had written to financiers in the City confident of getting it. Not a thought, apparently, for the 32,000 loyal workers, most of whom, it appears, are going to struggle to make ends meet in their retirement years due to their father's act of theft – an act of theft in which, at the moment, their own part is being investigated.

The brothers, it was reported in the Daily Mail (June 5th), "believe that the recession has created the ideal chance to snap up cheap stakes in electronic publishing, academic and professional journals, free newspapers and directories which will boom in the upturn." In addition to the £6 million loan, the two were hoping to use a secret legacy from their father, described by investigators as a "pot of gold" in offshore companies.



STILL LIVING IN LUXURY

Comment cannot at present be made on the younger Maxwells' alleged complicity in their fathers swindles, in view of the pending charges against them. What can be said, however, is that had the Maxwell cubs the slightest sense of honour they would have volunteered every penny left to them to replenish the pension fund that had been robbed.

That they could have been contemplating setting up in business and leaving the pensioners to rot gives some indication of the ethical standards of the Maxwell family.

The Jews, of which tribe the Maxwells are of course members, have a word for this kind of cheek. They call it chutzpah. Of chutzpah the young Maxwells certainly seem to have their full share.

If British law works as it should, there should be ways of compelling the Maxwells to surrender every bit of their remaining wealth to ensure that the pensioners do not go short. As it is, there are doubts as to whether this can be done. The system, it seems, is just made for the Maxwells and their ilk.

AS HOMOS SEEK CHILD-MOLESTERS' CHARTER...

Top Tories back queer offensive

THE QUEERS are on the offensive in Britain. They're pushing for yet another extension of the charter they've had since the Labour Government in the 1960s legalised homosexual behaviour. Now they want the age of consent for homos lowered from 21 to 16!

To say the least, the Tory Government of today isn't doing a lot to stop them. In fact a number of top Tories have come out openly in their support.

Heading the list is Sir John Wheeler, the ruling party's Chairman of the Commons Select Committee on Home Affairs. According to Sir John, who seems hot and strong for 'gay rights', Britain is 'hypocritical' in not allowing queers to indulge themselves with 16-year-olds, when normal people are permitted to have sex at that age. He thinks queers would be justified in appealing to the Euro-court on 'Human Rights' to get this changed.

What is more, Sir John wants scarce parliamentary time to be allocated to this one issue above all – at a time when Britain is rapidly degenerating into a lawless and depressed unemployment-ridden Third-World slum.

Many people may start to wonder about the scale of priorities that rules the minds of their House of Commons legislators!

Edwina in the forefront

Sir John is here partly echoing the line taken by exhibitionist ex-junior Agriculture Minister Edwina Currie (née Cohen), Tory MP for South Derbyshire, who was fired a few years back from her government post for starting a public scare about salmonella in eggs, thus ruining many of Britain's poultry farmers. She too wants queers to be allowed to do their own thing with 16-year-olds.

Some will find Mrs. Currie's attitude surprising. Her Orthodox Jewish upbringing, with its well-known sexual puritanism, ought to make her completely averse to this. So too should consideration of the views likely to be held by most of her constituents, who probably would not want their MP to give queers a carte blanche to molest their children.

Surprising too is the attitude of Mrs. Currie in view of her recent visit to a squalid 'gay bar' in Amsterdam. She professed herself 'shocked' by a back room that the proprietors made available for homosexual activities. In Holland the age of consent for queers was recently reduced to 12!

Meanwhile, the Tory Party has its very own 'gay lobby'. The Conservative 'Campaign for Homosexual Equality' is headed by a Dr. David Starkey, who, whilst disappointed that before the general election ministers didn't think it politically possible to lower the age of consent all the way to 16, sulkily fell back on saying that a drop to 18, which they were ready to concede, was "better than nothing." The Government may have been aware that many ordinary voters fear the increase in illicit sexual behaviour that would come about in boarding schools and children's homes if the age of consent were fully reduced.

Meanwhile, some Tories have been outraged by the absence of any consideration of the question of whether homosexuality is right or wrong. MP Walter Sweeney, voicing what is still probably by far the majority opinion among ordinary British folk, said: "We're dealing with a form of deviance, something which is a bad thing in society, and which encourages the spread of disease."

Leading queer invited to 10 Downing Street

But even in these times of exploding AIDS, for which homosexual behaviour has been the main transmission belt, Mr. Sweeney is unlikely to get the backing of his leader. In an ostentatious pre-election publicity stunt obviously aimed at catching the 'gay' vote, Mr. Major invited queer actor and 'gay rights' activist 'Sir' Ian McKellen to 10 Downing Street for a cosy tête-à-tête over tea and buns three or four months back. McKellen took this as evidence that the Tories were now as ready as Labour to start grovelling for homo grace and favour.

EDWINA CURRIE Leading campaign to reduce age of consent for homosexuals to 16

It might be noted that the queers' clout lies not just in the number of votes they can muster at the polls but perhaps more still in the power their network has grabbed within the mass media, upon which our politicians now depend for re-election.

Neither the Prime Minister nor the Home Secretary Kenneth Clarke are thought likely to mount strong resistance to the homos. Both are currently falling back on the formula that they "are not seeking change" to the age of consent, but regard it as "inevitable." What inspiring examples of leadership!

Of course, neither could explain why he takes such a line when politicians are supposed to exercise power on behalf of the majority of British people, whose feelings are without any doubt opposed overwhelmingly to any such changes (a Gallop poll last October found 74 per-cent opposed to any lowering of the age of consent).

Smash the IRA!
The mask of IRA evil
Innocent victims of the IRA
Since 1969, the IRA has killed up to 2,000 people and maimed thousands more in brutal and cowardly attacks in Ulster, Mainland Britain and Europe. Over 400 British soldiers have been murdered by these sick, sadistic monsters, who claim to be fighting for a 'free' Ireland. The truth is that the majority of Ulster folk (75 per cent) reject the IRA and wish to remain British. The IRA thugs, backed up by their political wing Sinn Fein, know this and resort to terrible atrocities to achieve their evil ambitions.
But in Britain today, the Tory, Labour and Liberal Democrat parties show nothing but appeasement when confronted with IRA terror forever coming up with 'peace initiatives', which concede a little more each each time to republican demands, instead of taking firm measures to wipe out the terrorists once and for all.
Our policy, by contrast, is: (1) To give a firm guarantee that Northern Ireland will forever remain British, with no concessions to republicanism; (2) To declare all-out war on the IRA and give our security forces full authorisation to wipe these terrorists out - by all means necessary!

Tory sell out on Euro-union
BRITAIN'S ELEVENTH HOUR
GREAT BRITAIN
Born 1707; RIP 1992
WHAT 1992 WILL MEAN FOR BRITAIN:-
● Complete loss of control over our economy and the pound eventually replaced by a European currency
● Loss of political sovereignty by 1997, with Britain's Government being reduced to a country council and foreigners making our laws
● The scrapping of all remaining import controls and the complete collapse of British industry as cheap foreign goods flood our markets, leading to even higher unemployment
● The scrapping of what little border controls we now have and more immigrants pouring in to add to those already here
The British National Party is the only party committed to pulling Britain out of Europe and achieving full British independence!

For our survival...
STOP THE DEFENCE CUTS!
LEST WE FORGET
This man died for you!
Recently, the Government decided to reduce dangerously the size of our armed forces over the next four years, with no less than 50,000 servicemen being thrown on the scrapheap. The army alone will lose 44,000 of its finest soldiers, and this will dramatically erode its ability to fight off any aggressor, such as it did in the Falklands war.
The Government proclaims that we are now living in a safer world. We disagree! In fact the world is becoming ever more dangerous - as events both in the Middle East and Europe now demonstrate. There is no reason to believe that British forces may not, at a moment's notice, be called upon to defend our interests somewhere.
After the appalling cuts now being planned, Britain will be left almost unarmed and totally unable to defend itself or its vital interests anywhere.
The traitors in Whitehall who are responsible for this disastrous policy must be stopped now!
The British National Party is the only party in this country committed to maintaining strong armed forces and keeping Britain properly defended.

Stop unemployment...
BAN
IMPORTS!
This year, as in previous years, the Government is allowing billions of pounds worth of cheaply priced foreign goods to flood the British market and exacerbate unemployment - in part because British industries cannot pay their workers the low wages that are paid by many of their foreign competitors.
And even worse is to come. As from 1992, with the advent of the European Single Market, the few remaining import barriers we had are coming down. This policy will put even more British workers on the dole.
There is only one way to prevent these things happening and to defend the jobs of British workers: We must place a progressive ban on imports of foreign-made manufactured goods, coal and all other items that can be produced in Britain, and we must build up British industries to fill the gap. This is the way to full employment, to the recovery of British industry and to national prosperity.
Can such a policy work? It has worked - in Japan, the most successful industrial nation in the modern world. We can make it work for ourselves too!

ASIAN EXTREMISM:
Our coming disaster
Islamic leader Kalim 'Mad Doc' Siddiqui
● The leader of the extreme Moslems in this country, Dr. Kalim Siddiqui says that Moslems must have their own state within Britain, adhering to the laws of their parliament and ignoring ours! This is in deliberate defiance of our Constitution.
● He has called white western society "The sick man of the modern world". In London in 1990, 20,000 of his Moslem supporters burned our national flag and attacked our police. In the Gulf War, Sidiqui's self-named Moslem parliament threw its total support behind Iraq!
To combat this growing threat to the safety of British society we say: Stop immigration! Start repatriation! Vote British National Party!

BNP campaign in Halifax

IN last month's British Nationalist we highlighted the appalling situation in Halifax, Yorkshire, where a section of the local Asian community has declared a virtual race war against the Whites, who have lived peacefully in the area for generations. The British National Party has now launched a campaign to defend the rights of the local white people, and a special leaflet has been produced for distribution. In Halifax the message is simple: Only the BNP will stand up for the Whites. All the other political parties, the community groups, the local auth-orities and (unhappily) some sections of the police are interested only in looking after the ethnic minorities.

Post-Election Fund: £148.50 raised

The British National Party's Post-Election Fund, the launching of which was announced last month, has got off to a modest start, with £243.50 raised at the time we go to press with this issue. This, however, is probably rather better than it looks. Allowing for the time British Nationalist takes to get to its readers, for those readers to become aware of fund appeals and finally for their donations to reach the BNP office, rather less than a month has passed from the latter moment to the writing of this fund report. By the time we write the fund report for next month we will have a better picture of readers' response.

The Post-Election Fund has been necessitated by the large pile-up in general election printing bills, and the need to conserve general BNP funds to finance new campaigns for party expansion following the election. The fund's target figure is £3,000, thus leaving £2,756.50 still to be raised.

We appeal to all readers to dig deep into their pockets this month to enable the fund to meet its target quickly. Please mark all donations 'Post-Election Fund' and send them to PO Box 117, Welling, Kent DA16 3DW. Those requiring receipts for donations of less than £10 please send SAE.

American leaders visit Britain

AS this issue goes to press, four American friends of our movement are enjoying a visit to this country, partly as the guests of the British National Party and partly at the invitation of an ad-hoc committee of historical revisionists. Attorneys Kirk D. Lyons and Sam Dickson are well-known and leading activists in the patriotic movement in the United States. They are accompanied by Martin O'Toole, also a lawyer and a partner of Mr. Dickson, and David Holloway, an associate of Mr. Lyons in the CAUSE Foundation, set up to provide legal help to patriotic activists being subjected to persecution in the courts by the US Government.

JEWS DEMAND BAN ON ENTRY

When it was known that Mr. Lyons and others were coming here, the Board of Deputies of British Jews immediately started putting pressure on the Home Office to deny them entry into the country. Fortunately this failed – is our Government actually getting impertinent enough to believe that it, and not the Jewish Board, is in charge of Britain? We do not of course know what will happen after this report is written and sent to the printer.

On June 27th our American guests appeared at a meeting in Glasgow organised by the BNP Scottish Region. All four spoke to a lively audience of about 80, with Steve Cartwright in the chair. Political opponents who tried to locate the meeting to cause trouble were skilfully wrong-footed by the local organisers.

LIVELY MEETINGS IN SCOTLAND AND YORKSHIRE

The next day Kirk Lyons and David Holloway were guests at a BNP meeting in Dewsbury, organised by the party's Yorkshire Region. In this event an unpleasant opposition mob, aided more than willingly by local police chiefs, contrived successfully to pressure the owner of the meeting hall to cancel the party's booking. Undeterred, the organisers transferred the meeting to nearby Overthorpe Park, where good fortune favoured us with fine weather and enabled the meeting to be held in the open air, with about 80 again in attendance. The mob staged a nasty counter-demo during which missiles were thrown at BNP members and their guests, but this failed to stop the event going ahead.

The final meeting, booked for London on Saturday, July 4th, is being organised by a committee of revisionists including the author David Irving. The BNP is playing a supporting role in the staging of this meeting, helping with advertising and providing stewards.

Various left-wing groups, including the Socialist 'Workers' Party and its offspring the 'Anti-Nazi' League (ANAL), have promised to try and stop the meeting. We do not intend to allow them to do so, so it should be a very lively afternoon. Reports of the meeting will be given next month.

Recruitment drive in Ulster

THE British National Party's new unit in Northern Ireland, though as yet smalll, is getting increasingly active. Last month the unit, which is based in Portadown, carried out a local recruitment drive, with large numbers of leaflets distributed in letter boxes, on street corners and in pubs. Stickers have also gone up. Local Organiser Eddie Kidd reports a great deal of sympathetic interest from the general public, one publican actually going so far as to put a BNP 'Stand by Ulster' leaflet on his notice board. And at long last, Ulster people are starting to show real interest in the race and immigration issue, and BNP literature on this subject has made a big impact.

Following the Portadown activity, the local members met up with BNP supporters in Belfast and carried out a propaganda drive in the south of the city. It is expected that the party will be forming an official Belfast unit very shortly.

Eddy Kidd reports high morale in Northern Ireland BNP and says that he and his friends are convinced that the party has a major role to play in the province, particularly with the failed Unionist leadership now sitting at the negotiating table with the local republicans and the Eire Government in Dublin.

LAYING DOWN THE LAW
This report appeared in the* Sunday Telegraph *on June 28th. As can be seen, the Jewish Board of Deputies once again has taken it upon itself to try to dictate to the Government who may or may not enter our country, just as it did with the Leuchter visit last year.

NEWS ROUND-UP

Clarke urged to ban Ku Klux lawyers

THE Home Secretary, Kenneth Clarke, has been urged to ban from Britain a group of lawyers due to take part in seminars on whether or not the Holocaust took place, writes Valerie Elliott, Home Affairs Correspondent.

The Board of Deputies of British Jews has written to Mr Clarke claiming Kirk D Lyons, a lawyer who has defended members of the Ku Klux Klan, is due to speak with the Right-wing historian David Irving, in Yorkshire today and in London on Saturday. It says a surprise guest is expected, who they believe could either be Doug Christie, a Canadian lawyer and Right-wing activist, or Sam Dickson, a US lawyer with alleged links to the Ku Klux Klan.

Boipatong squatter camp in the Transvaal last month, when an ANC mob attacking state President de Klerk's car was dispersed, is perhaps one small sign of how little real substance there is to the vaunted 'mass action' staged from time to time by Mandela & Co. When the chips are down, the police and army come out on top every time.

On the other hand, if South Africa's Whites don't get their act together quickly, and take back effective control of their land and their destiny, their state President may yet end up by bartering away their rights and freedoms, not to say their lives, over the negotiating table. Alternatively, the country may dissolve into anarchy, providing the pretext Mandela wants for UN intervention. Indeed, it could well be that the recent disorder has been engineered with precisely that object in mind.

End to paralysis needed

The Whites can make a start in preventing this by calling Mandela's bluff. In fact it's high time for Whites, not only in South Africa but everywhere else, to stop playing the paralysed rabbit in front of the snake. The likes of Mandela, the media-hyped 'Black Power' agitators springing up like poisonous toadstools in every country, not least Britain, do not have to be talked to, temporised with or even taken seriously. Nor should they be.

Whites everywhere, did they but know it, still at this moment have the power to settle the hash of such elements once and for all. It's time they started to use it with vigour and determination.

The Mandelas of this world should simply be smashed.

STOP PRESS

Mandela's wife Winnie, with whom he only recently broke reluctantly because of her complicity in the torture and murder of a black teenager, is now being probed over theft allegations. She is said to have swindled £80,000 from the African National Congress.

It is claimed that she spent the cash on high living with her alleged lover, sacked ANC lawyer Dali Mpofu.

South African investigators say she spent the proceeds on clothes, gems, hotels and a Concorde trip.

NO RECOVERY FOR THREE YEARS

but for Britain and the British people!

We then need to get out of Europe and repudiate all European rules that impede our freedom to conduct our economic policies as we see fit. The ERM is an example.

'Buy British' policy needed

Next, we must adopt a policy of 'Buy British' in all purchases of manufactured goods. Imports must be limited to strict quotas, which will be gradually reduced to zero while British industries are built up, with an assured home market as their base, until they provide for all our needs in finished goods. Only necessary imports in food and minerals should be permitted, and these should be obtained on a preferential basis from Canada, Australia and New Zealand. In this way Britain can find its way back to full employment in quite a short time. With full employment, the state will not be paying millions to be idle, and purchasing power in the home market will increase dramatically.

Inflation should be brought under control by the Government assuming the sole prerogative of creating money, taking away this power from the banks. With the banks no longer bringing additional money into circulation by making loans, the lending rate can be drastically reduced without inflation resulting. With that reduction in the lending rate, industry can then begin to reinvest and expand rapidly. Unlike expansion under present conditions, this expansion can be steady and sure – because of the huge expansion in the home market brought about by the gradual exclusion of imports.

These are the policies that will bring Britain out of recession. All that is needed is a government with true faith in this country – and the will to act!

Activity organised by British National Party

London round-up

THE LAST MONTH has seen a great deal of activity by British National Party units in the London area.

Capitalising upon the great upsurge in interest in the BNP in East London following the general election, a highly successful paper sale was held in Canning Town in the Borough of Newham on Saturday, the 13th June. A new unit of the BNP will shortly be formed in Newham and another one in Hackney — two boroughs which border on Tower Hamlets.

Tower Hamlets itself has not been neglected since polling day; recently Chrisp Street Market was extensively leafletted. Interestingly, on polling day itself two 'Anti-Nazi' League members from the United States were arrested in Chrisp Street while trying to incite a mob of Blacks to attack a BNP campaigning team.

Other successful paper sales have been held recently in Debden by Epping Forest BNP and in the Blue Market in Bermondsey*, South London.*

Meanwhile, the campaign spearheaded by Croydon BNP against Barnard Marcus estate agents for their encouragement of the purchase of cheap repossessed homes by Hong Kong Chinese has continued, with a picket and paper-sale held in Epsom*, Surrey, on Saturday, the 20th June. Hundreds of specially produced leaflets were handed out to shoppers on the busy high street outside a local Barnard Marcus office.*

Slightly further afield, London activists joined with local members to take part in a highly successful paper-sale in Bedford on Saturday, the 6th June. Extensive local media coverage was achieved by this activity.

The highlight of last month, however, was an East End rally and social held in Bethnal Green on Saturday, the 13th June. About 100 people attended this enjoyable event, and a handsome profit was made to add a welcome boost to local finances. The rally was addressed by local Organiser Eddy Butler and National Activities Organiser Richard Edmonds, who gained 1,310 votes as the BNP candidate for the area in the recent general election.

ANNUAL RALLY

This is to inform all readers that the British National Party Annual Rally this year will be held on Saturday, the 24th October. Do not forget to keep the date free!

BNP defends Whites in Walsall

EARLIER THIS YEAR, a young white man was walking with two friends back home from a pub in the centre of Walsall, in the West Midlands. Walsall is a mainly white town but it contains some depress-ing and dangerous multi-racial districts. Unluckily for this young white man, his journey home took him through one of these areas.

Out of an alleyway appeared a mob of 18 Asians and two Blacks. Without provocation, the mob attacked the three Whites. The motivation for this attack would appear to have been nothing other than naked anti-white hatred.

One of the Whites managed to escape. Another was seriously injured and had his leather jacket slashed to pieces and covered in blood before being stolen. The last of the three, Paul Carter, was viciously murdered.

Of those who carried out the outrage, two, who were supposedly unemployed and penniless, managed mysteriously to find £700 for one-way airline tickets to Pakistan, where they have since gone to ground. Only one of the culprits looks likely to face justice.

Meanwhile, the police and the local authorities have done all they could to keep the white community 'in its place' since the murder. The media virtually ignored it. Just compare this with the media treatment of the killing of the black youth, Rolan Adams, who died in Thamesmead, in South East London, a year or so ago.

DAY OF ACTION

But the BNP will not forget Paul Carter. On Saturday, the 6th June, a highly successful Day of Action was held by the party in Walsall, after local residents had called for our assistance. A paper sale was held in the town centre. The white working-class district of Bloxwich was leafletted by large teams flying the Union Flag, and the area in which Paul Carter was murdered was also leafletted. The day was brought to a close with a well-attended indoor meeting addressed by local man Simon Rowley, National Activities Organiser Richard Edmonds and Midlands Regional Organiser John Peacock.

The BNP gained a tremendous amount of support from the local community, and its campaign will not end there. A special 'Rights for Whites' leaflet has already been produced to highlight the Paul Carter case, and it will be distributed in Walsall by local activists. In addition to this, an application has been put in for the staging of a 'Rights for Whites' march through the town on the 25th July.

The West Midlands is set to become a major growth area for the British National Party in the second half of 1992. The murder of Paul Carter has highlighted the need for the BNP to defend the embattled white communities in the region and provide a legitimate political outlet for the people's justifiable grievances. The BNP has shown again and again that it is only through political action that the wrongs of society can be righted. The party will not be found wanting by the people of Walsall. We will be back — Paul Carter will not be forgotten!

- The crushing of the IRA, the termination of the Anglo-Irish Agreement and firm support for the loyalist majority in Northern Ireland.
